(Version 1.2, 08/2023)

Welcome to this international survey conducted by [insert the name of the institution conducting the survey]!

Along with hundreds of other young people in this country and around the world, we are inviting you to tell us about your life, your daily activities, your relationships with others, and any problems you might have..

One of the best ways to understand people is to listen to them. On the following screens you can tell us about your personal experiences and share your opinions. Don't think too much about the items; just answer them spontaneously.

We take our research responsibility seriously

We do not need any personal identifying data from you such as your name, birthday, home address, or your email address. Your parents, teachers or friends won't see your answers. Even our research team will not know who has given what answer. And the survey results are only reported for groups of respondents, not individuals.

1. We guarantee the following:

- Your data will be treated anonymously.

Codebook Appendix: Textbox Notation and Coding

Attached to the questions are boxes that specify the variable names, legal values (range of valid values and missing values), and the question number in square brackets. The following notation is used:

The contents of the textboxes are searchable. This allows to enter a variable name found in the data set (or the question number in square brackets as indicated in the variable label) in the search function of your PDF-reader to quickly locate the respective question in the questionnaire above (and vice versa). If a variable cannot be found in the questionnaire this indicates that the variable either belongs to the set of meta- or para-data variables or that this variable has been constructed in addition to the original variables of the standard questionnaire.

There are several basic types of missing values: (a) no answer, (b) not applicable, (c) ambiguous answer, and (d) values coded as missing because they have a special meaning (e.g. “don’t know”) or because they are larger than acceptable (e.g. 30+ of the variable age [C2] or 9996 denoting counts equal or larger than 9996). The missing values are labeled accordingly to indicate their meaning.

In Stata data files “extended missing values” are used to denote these types of missings as .a, .b, .c, and .d (note that in Stata these values are larger than the default or system missing value .). In SPSS data files missing values are coded counting downwards from 9, 99, 999, 9999, or 99999 depending on the number of digits of “the maximum valid value plus 4”. Hence, in SPSS the extended missing value of Stata .a is translated into 9, 99, 999, 9999, or 99999, .b is translated into 8, 98, 998, 9998, or 99998, .c is translated into 7, 97, 997, 9997, or 99997, etc., depending on the number of digits. The textbox notation in this codebook shows the missing values as used in SPSS.

The values of valid values are shown next to the answer options in blue, missing values in red. Note that the values are already recoded such that “no” is coded as 0, “yes” is coded as 1, and values of scale items are (re)coded such that the larger value points to the meaning of the measurement. For example, larger values of the “revenge” items [L1] (p. 17) indicate a stronger need or tendency to take revenge. This also implies that for some items “fully agree” is coded with the maximum value while for other items it is coded with the minimum value. For example, for the revenge items [L1.1] and [L1.5] “fully agree” is coded as 1, whereas for the remaining revenge items [L1.2 – L1.4] “fully agree” is coded as 5. As a consequence, all revenge items should correlate positively if the items have the same latent meaning.

Users of the Stata data sets can use “v1-macros” to easily access items of the same type (e.g. prevalence, count, scale) after running v1 rebuild when opening a data set (see the Stata documentation via help v1).
